Loxley common - A gloomy dark woods that is very cut off and isolated with trees all around and a nice view around that's both calming and very eerie ===== Stannington Woods - Just as gloomy and the right kind of atmosphere as Loxley Common above but stannington is a lot more open compared to Loxley, more of a risk of getting dog walkers coming past.			Yes Loxley common is very suitable, although being a pain to take all the equipment deep into the woods, it could very much be worth it. Stannington woods is also very suitable because of the fact it has great views that will look amazing on my film. If we pick a time when there are no dog walkers, we could have a perfect location.

Access Issues

It's going to be hard getting around both areas due to the equipment we will be taking but I can see it being harder at Loxley Common then at Stannington Woods. Loxley Common has quite a huge uphill trek to get to the secluded sections that will be really nice to film at. So, if i decide to film there it is going to be quite hard getting all the cameras, lighting equipment, sound kits and props and everything needed up there. It will take a few people to help lift the load but if that is the risk we need to take to film there then it's what we're gonna have to do.

Lighting Issues

My film will be filmed in the day time so lighting will not be much of an issue, but if it happens to be a bit too dark then i'd like i have lighting kits booked out ready to use to increase the lighting on my set. These will come in very handy as they have the right settings to not look too harsh on camera.

Sound Issues

We have the sound equipment booked out as well. These Zoom mics will be used to record all the audio and wildtrak needed for my film. The only issues we could have is the sound not working or the device dying on us when we need it the most. But thankfully I've thought ahead and gotten some power banks charged ready incase this happens.
